From the farm into the

Educators exploring possibilities of adding agricultural curriculum into Louisiana public elementary and secondary classrooms.

CLASSROOM

By Veronica Mosgrove

A study group was established recently to explore the possibility of implementing an agricultural curriculum for elementary and secondary schools, one that could possibly provide college credits for students.

Kathy Conerly, a 30-year agriscience teacher at Zachary High School in East Baton Rouge Parish, said she uses the school's vegetable garden and greenhouses to teach her students practical skills.

"I teach plant science through vegetable gardens. It's a different approach to teaching, but they (students) learn plant science through hands-on activities. Gardening allows them to experience plant growth processes first hand," Conerly said. "They learn soil science, as well - how to amend soils, check pH levels, mix fertilizer - and see the relationships between their plants, the soil, water and the environment. They also learn the health benefits of eating fresh veggies."

Over the years, Conerly has been involved in writing the state's agriscience curriculum. Conerly says that, with the agricultural industry being a major employer in the state of Louisiana and in the country, it's important to fuse agriculture into the curriculum.

"There are so many opportunities in the industry. I see a greater disconnect today between students and agriculture. Their experiences with plants, animals and natural resources are limited," Conerly said. "Infusing agriculture into curricula may provide the link between students and a rewarding career. Projects like school gardens or farms give students practical experiences across curricula, especially in science, math and soft skills like communication and problem solving. Infusing agriculture would provide another avenue for teachers to connect academics to real-world skills."

Bobby Mason, a member of the commission, has a degree in agriculture from the University of Louisiana and works at Louisiana State University. Mason's passion for agriculture began when he attended Blackford High School in San Jose, California, which had a farm on campus.

Mason said, "Lessons learned from my high school agriculture experience have proven valuable throughout my life. Not only did I learn the cost of producing market animals, profit line and goal setting, it was also character building. I learned what it meant to be part of a team and from this came a sense of pride of belonging. To be successful in this program, I had to embrace hard work, good work ethics, leadership and responsibility."

"I also witnessed first-hand how a school farm changed the lives and future of my fellow students. Boys, who would have otherwise been truant, couldn't wait to attend classes and were engaged in learning."

Knowing the value of this agricultural education, Mason approached state Sen. Ben Nevers of Bogalusa to create a school that would have a functioning farm on-site to offer this same opportunity to the children of Louisiana.

Mason said, "The idea grew from there. After researching school farms in other states, the data revealed that absenteeism was cut in half; parental involvement increased; testing scores soared and children were engaged in learning. High school students graduate with hands on entrepreneurial experience. They leave with a sense of confidence of knowing how to run a business. This experience will be beneficial no matter what career path they follow."

While the students are learning plant and soil science, they're also learning how to grow their own food, work cooperatively with other people, be responsible for the garden and do things in a timely manner such as harvest, weed and water their crops.

"Today's agriculturalists wear many hats. They're environmentalists, businessmen and women, soil and plant scientists, technicians. It is mind boggling how many hats they wear," says Conerly. "I don't call them farmers anymore. I call them agricultural producers because today it encompasses so much - academics, business and technology."

The group is comprised of educators, agricultural specialists and state leaders who serve on the legislative agriculture and education committees. Senate Concurrent Resolution 64 (SCR 64) was passed during the 2013 regular legislative session to establish the Louisiana Agriculture Education Study Group.

The goal of the group is to look into the current status of agricultural education and provide recommendations to the legislature and State Board of Elementary and Secondary Education.

Call Bobby Mason at 225-571-7062 if you would like to get involved in this project. The next meeting is scheduled for 1 p.m. Dec. 10 at the Louisiana School for the Deaf, 2888 Brightside Drive, Baton Rouge.

Louisiana Agriculture & Forestry Today

LDAF partners to form animal disaster group

Recently, the Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry (LDAF) was approached by the Stephenson Disaster Management Institute (SDMI) to discuss creating the Animals in Disaster Advisory Group (ADAG). In short, we think it's a great idea.

The Animals in Disaster Advisory Group was formed to lead a coalition of involved and interested organizations to reduce the harm suffered by animals as a result of disasters. The group is made up of individuals representing local, state, and the federal government, academia, and private institutions, with expertise in emergency animal preparedness, response, and recovery matters who will utilize a strategic approach to improving the care of animals during an emergency. The ultimate objective of ADAG is to save lives and prevent the suffering of both humans and animals involved in a disaster.

While we have come a long way with our emergency and recovery efforts, we are always looking at new ways to improve our disaster response while increasing our effectiveness and efficiency. Working with this group of emergency and animal experts will only move our objectives forward. At the end of the day, it's about saving people's lives.

As we've seen in past events, people are reluctant to leave their family pets behind, specifically during an evacuation. Our goal is to ensure that their four legged family members are safe and secure then we can ultimately get everyone out of harm's way and eventually back home.

Animal care associated with disaster events and planning is an area of tremendous and growing importance to the disaster management community and affects decisions regarding human lives as well. This advisory group is composed of some of the leading experts in the nation and will be instrumental in shaping the future of disaster management.

Current ADAG membership includes the Stephenson Disaster Management Institute (SDMI), Louisiana Department of Agriculture & Forestry (LDAF), American Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (ASPCA), Louisiana State Animal Response Team (LSART), LSU School of Veterinary Medicine, United States Department of Agriculture (USDA), North Carolina Department of Agriculture Emergency Programs Division, Texas A&M Veterinary Medicine & Biomedical Sciences, and Louisiana Department of Health Hospitals, Infectious Disease

'Tis the poinsettia season

By Rick Bogren
LSU AgCenter

HAMMOND, La. – The Thanksgiving and Christmas holiday season means it's time for poinsettias.

"You can start selecting poinsettias most years around Thanksgiving week, and they are generally available in good numbers until Christmas," said LSU AgCenter horticulturist Allen Owings.

People can expect poinsettias to last well into 2014 if they give proper consideration to selection and care, he said.

Poinsettias are available in a tremendous variety of leaf – or bract – colors, including red, white, marble, pink and combinations of these colors. Red poinsettias continue to represent around 90 percent of the market, although other colors are increasing in popularity.

"The new poinsettias of various colors and those with different leaf shapes are referred to as novelty types," Owings said.

He said points to consider when purchasing poinsettias include the size and number of the colored bracts. They should be large and extend over the lower green leaves.

"The number and size of bracts usually dictate plant price," Owings said. "A premium-quality poinsettia usually has at least six bracts and should have more."

Purchasers also should inspect the lower green leaves on poinsettias. Leaves should have good appearance and extend over the rim of the pot. Drooping leaves may indicate problems.

"You also should check for insects, primarily white flies, underneath the lower leaves," the horticulturist said. "The most important observation that can be made before purchasing a poinsettia is inspection of the green flower parts – called cyathia – in the center of the bracts. These flower parts indicate display life."

Plants with large cyathia showing yellow pollen and sap will have the least amount of display life left. Plants with smaller cyathia, little to no pollen and no sap will have the longest display life. A poinsettia should last for four to six weeks in the home if properly cared for.

"To prolong the beauty and health of poinsettias once they are in the home, proper care is essential," Owings said. "Although poinsettias do not become acclimated to interior settings as well as most foliage plants, it is easy to be successful."

Select a location that receives some sunlight. Interior hallways are a poor location. It also is very important to avoid exposing the plant to sudden temperature changes, so don't place a poinsettia near a ventilation system or in a drafty spot near a doorway. But temperatures in most homes are acceptable, and the ideal is to provide 70- to 75-degree daytime temperatures and 62- to 65-degree nights.

As for watering, Owings says to allow the soil surface to dry out thoroughly before watering with warm water. Just the soil surface should be dry to the touch before watering again.

Avoid water or mist on the colored bracts, and do not let the poinsettia stand in water for more than 30 minutes to an hour, he said.

"Along with poinsettias, amaryllis, Norfolk Island pines, orchids, Christmas cactus and several other plants can be used to brighten your home during the holiday season," Owings said.

Quarantine established to prevent spread of citrus pest, diseases

The Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry (LDAF) has declared a state of emergency and established a quarantine effective November 24, 2013 restricting movement of citrus trees, citrus nursery stock and citrus plant parts except for fruit from parishes where plant diseases called citrus greening and citrus canker and the insect called Asian citrus psyllid have been confirmed.

Quarantined areas for citrus greening include Orleans and Washington parishes.

Quarantined areas for Asian citrus psyllid include the entire state of Louisiana for interstate movement of regulated materials, unless properly treated. Quarantined areas for citrus canker include all of Orleans Parish and portions of Jefferson, Plaquemines and St. Charles parishes.

Regulatory restrictions prohibit the movement of regulated articles, including citrus trees and citrus plant parts except fruit, out of these quarantined areas.

Citrus greening and citrus canker have not been found in Louisiana's citrus nursery stock production region, centered outside of the quarantined area in Plaquemines Parish south of Belle Chasse. Citrus stock treated according to federal protocols for the possible presence of Asian citrus psyllid and found free of this insect can move freely from this area without restriction.

For more information on the diseases, the insect or the restrictions, contact the LDAF Horticulture and Quarantine Programs office at 225-952-8100 or go to www.LDAF.la.gov.
